

The Old Storehouse Bar

10 minutes walk from Trinity Collage

3 Crown Alley, Temple Bar, Dublin, D02 CX67

Located in the heart of Temple Bar, just behind the old Central Bank, The Old Storehouse occupies a site steeped in Dublin's commercial past.

Built in the early 1800s as a wine warehouse for Ussher & Clarke, the building later stored tea, coffee, and spirits before transforming into one of the city's liveliest pubs.

Spread across three bars – including a snug for quiet pints and a main bar for trad sessions – it strikes the right balance between visitor-friendly and authentically Irish.

Live music takes place from 2pm Saturdays, running late into the night.

O'Donoghue's

15 minutes walk from Trinity Collage

15 Merrion Row, Dublin, D02 PF50

Few places capture Dublin's musical soul quite like O'Donoghue's Bar on Merrion Row. Established in the 18th century, it began life as a grocery and shebeen before becoming one of Dublin's most celebrated pubs.

In 1934, Paddy and Maureen O'Donoghue took over, turning it into a nightly gathering place for musicians and storytellers. By the 1960s, its reputation catapulted, with The Dubliners, one of the most famous Irish bands of the time, making it their regular haunt.

Traditional music takes place Saturday, from 5:30pm until midnight.

The Celt

13 minutes walk from Trinity Collage

81 Talbot St, North City, Dublin, D01 YK51

The Celt is one of the well-known traditional pubs in Dublin, and you'll find it on the north side of the city on Talbot St., close to some of the most central hotels in Dublin.

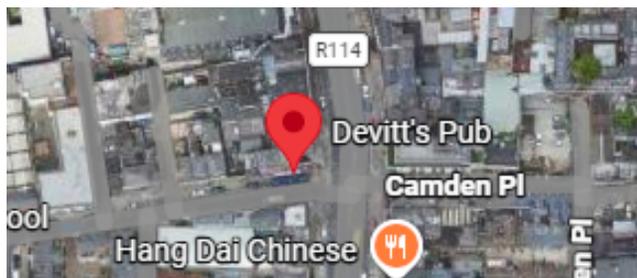

The pub's back bar, known as "The Shed," dates to 1864 and has lived several lives, first as horse stables, then as Ireland's very first trade union hall. It was here that Jim Larkin, whose statue stands on nearby O'Connell St., held meetings that helped spark the 1913 Dublin Lockout.

Live music takes place 7 nights a week at the Celt, with 2 bands playing simultaneously on Fridays and Saturdays.

Devitt's Pub

19 minutes walk from Trinity Collage

78 Camden Street Lower, Saint Kevin's, Dublin 2, D02 C642

Devitts sits on lively Camden Street, just an eight-minute walk from St Stephen's Green, and it's one of the few remaining pubs in Dublin where traditional Irish music still rings out seven nights a week.

A pub has stood at 78 Camden Street since the 1870s, when it was first licensed by Christopher C. Clinch and later run by Patrick Ryan, who transformed it into a classic Victorian pub with mahogany fittings and stained glass.

Live music takes place Saturday from 7:30pm until close.

Other Traditional Music Pubs in Temple Bar

All within 15 minutes walking distance from Trinity College

- Ha'penny Bridge Inn

- The Temple Bar

- Peadar Kearneys

- The Quays

- Gogarty's

- The Auld Dub

- Merchant's Arch

